Then it keeps on saying that it doesn't have a "dcfsr.sys" which can only be found in the directory "system" so is there any way I can get back my files from my hard drive?
Cannot Access Volume A: I had the same problem. For me, it was my virtual memory settings. Windows will not let you open 2 programs that are using more than what is free, so it will switch to using a swap file, if there is one. Go to System Settings -> System -> Advanced System Settings and switch Virtual Memory to On. (Should be disabled if you just purchased a computer). Proposed R/RW UAUIA is a cross-institutional, collaborative and international network of scholars and practitioners – students and researchers – from universities and research institutions working on research that engages with the values and intentions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), and the United Nations' other human rights instruments. We undertake our research in fields and through the methods and media of the digital and new information and communication technologies (ICT) to support the creation of knowledge, change attitudes, and generate strategies and political and social action that inspire individuals, institutions, and societies to better comply with, and advance, the instruments of human rights protection. During the period of 2015-2018, we are planning to carry out our research in the following areas: (1) Concrete and theoretical studies on the potential and methods of “upstream engagement” of universities and research institutions in international human rights issues. (2) The focus of the research project is on the potential and limitations of engaging the higher education community in the field of human rights. The research project aims to create a dialogue between the research group and the current members of the project community which will lead to: (1) the collection of their reflections on the research question in the first article; (2) the development of first shared reflections in the second article; (3) the establishment of a specific network between the research group and the current project community which will lead to the third article in the research project; (4) the creation of the joint publication f30f4ceada
